Central Cagayan Negrito is spoken by about 300 Negritos calling themselves Agtas. They live in an area of the Cagayan Valley, northern Luzon, Philippines, stretching from Lallo, just south of the mouth of the Cagayan River, to Amulung, just north of Tuguegarao, capital of the province. They are found east of the river in barrios close to the foot of the Sierra Madre Mountains, and westward they extend to the municipality of Rizal. Physically they are of aboriginal stock, dark-skinned, often fuzzy-haired, and close to pygmy size. They are still largely nomadic, living by hunting (with bow and arrow), or foraging for food, in the forest. Their dwelling places are small wall-less houses, usually two or three together, housing at times up to thirty individuals. These houses are to be found on the outskirts of outlying Ilocano barrios.

The materials for this vocabulary were collected monolingually over a period of about seven months while resident first at Nassiping in the municipality of Alcala, and then at Bagunut in the municipality of Baggao, Cagayan. The chief informants were Alfredo (Pedro) Tumbali, (about 30 years of age), his brother, Sittong, and the latter's wife, Loring Plemenon. In common with all members of their tribe, the three informants speak fluent Ilocano. The Alcala branch of the dialect is that which is here recorded. It is spoken by the brothers, and to a lesser extent by the wife, a native of Baggao whose speech is slightly different from that spoken at Alcala.

There are approximately 1000 entries in the vocabulary. As well as words in everyday usage, some words have been included for their cultural interest. An attempt has been made primarily to list word bases. Some affixed forms have been retained, however, when semantically they cannot be divided into affix and word base, but depend for their meaning on the full affixed form. Derivatives of word bases exhibiting different types of affixation have been included and have usually been tabled under the word base concerned. Where there is a Tagalog equivalent, it appears in brackets following the dialect entry. A comma occurs between words of like meaning, and a semi-colon between words of different meaning in both the English and the Tagalog entries. The Tagalog has been included in the hope that those using this vocabulary will ultimately become literate in the National Language as well as in their own dialect. Pronominal forms, both bound and free, have been listed together at the end of the vocabulary. An English index is included for convenience. Illustrations are by Miss Rosemary Rodda of the Summer Institute of Linguistics.

The phonemes of Central Cagayan Negrito, in the alphabetical order in which they appear in the vocabulary, are as follows: a, b, k, d, e, f, g, h, i, l, m, n, ng, o, p, r, s, t, u, v, w, y, z, and glottal catch symbolized by q. Stress is not marked; it falls usually on the final syllable. There is phonemic contrast between short and long vowels, which has been symbolized by doubling the vowels. a is pronounced like the vowel in the English word 'cup', and aa like that in the word 'far'. Both r and h, and k and g alternate stem medially in some words. In such cases both forms have been listed in the vocabulary. r is usually trilled but becomes a single flap in fast speech. f and v are pronounced with both lips as in Ibanag rather than with lips and teeth as in English. z is pronounced further back in the mouth than g, with the tongue closer to the palate. All other sounds are pronounced like their counterparts in the Filipino National Language.

We are indebted to Dr. Rufino Alejandro, Executive Secretary of the Institute of National Language, for supplying the Tagalog entries, and to the United States Information Service for the paper used in this book.
